was after four in the morning. The Coroner, in charging the jury, called their attention to the fact that the deceased was probably ill enough to be very fretful and Mr. Barnard said that would apply then annoying. That the father carried him out to where he was taking him was refuted by the place at which he was found. He was car- binding, not only as to the amount of the arrying the child straight towards the sea. It would be for them to deside whether be deliberately intended that the child should die, in which case they would find murder, or whether be showed a culpable carelessness as to whether it lived or died, which might reduce the verdict to one of manslaughter. Whether the shild would have died naturally they did not know-indeed it was possible that it might have recovered-but to, take a weak child out and exposed to the rain, was undoubtedly the means of accelerating its death, and the crime was therefore, at the least, manulaughter.

FULL, TRUE, AND PARTICULAR AC COUNT OF THE PROTOCOUS

(Polt Mall Gasetts.) We propose in this article to give a faithful count of the "protocols of conferences hold in Landon respecting the Treaty of March, 1856; " or ruther of that most important part of them which deals with the abrogation of the Black See clauses of that Trenty. In doing so. we beg the reader to recall what we have here tofore said about this so-called Conference, and the unvarying attitude of Russia, and the part of England, and the shamofully misrepresented "chestfulness" of Turkey. For these protocols are our justification; and no judgment was ever ratified by facts more completely or mor to iserably.

First Sitting. - The first meeting of the Con-terence was held on the 17th of January. Ear

Granvillo was made president; and he took occasion to declare at once that the Conference was really to examine without any foregone conclusion, and to discuss with perfect freedom.

what his lordehip called the "proposals" of Russia. Further, and in order that their uninimity might furnish a striking proof that the Powers recognize the ginding nature of treaties, his lordship invited the plenipotentiaries to sign the following protocol ! That the mid plenipotentiarios "recognize it as an essential principle of the hiw of nations that no Pover a Trenty, nor modify the stipulations thereof, unless with the consent of the contracting Powers by meens of an amicable arrangement. The various Ministers were required to sign this statement, and they did so: thus seeming to estublish for any other set of diplomatiats liberty to declare that treaty engagements are not bindopinion must be held tolerable. After the solemn scene of signing, the representative of Turkey says he for one had no difficulty about because his Government is in the habit of recognizing the binding observeter of treaties. The Austrian Minister save his Government did not besitate to accept that Conference, because it gave a fresh pledge for the faith of treaties, &c. The Italian Minister says he is "rajeided at the agreement of the Powers-resulting from the protocol just signed." Russia is silent. Prissis says nothing. But, "on the invitationof the president, the plenipotentiary of Russia speaks." He begins by recapitulating certain alleged modifications, which (as he suys) have original stipulations of the treaty-speaking particularly of the modified government of the principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia. All this we have heard of before in Prince Gorts. chakoff's despatches; and it has been universally dismissed as so much busiless preteace. He then proceeds to observe that times have very much changed since the Congress of Paris; and considering these changes-we shall see presently what they are-be thought" the conclusion must be drawn Bion guided by an unanimous sentiment of equity and concord." He further declares that ais august master attaches importance to this revision "in the double interest of the security. also dame before the meeting. This matter, a Turkish Minister replies. He says " he appreciutes the spirit of conciliation which has diotated the statement of the plenipotentiary of Russia, and that, animated by the same conciliatory spirit, he will abstain from discussing certain points of that statement on which ho differs. " But he is ready to join in the examination of a question, which equally concerns other great Powers, and which "might otherwise lead to complications which it is in the general interest to prevent. " He concludes by asking for a postponement that he may have time to consider Russia's proposal. Then

> : 8.cond Sitting:-The Minister of Turkey says he has examined the proposal of the plenipotentiary of Russia; " but before expressing an il opinion upon this proposal, he would wish that Baron de Brannow would be so good as to define it." Accordingly the Russian Minister reads what is called a summary; thus commencing, in terms the delicacy of which is very remark-

"The statement which I had the honour to place before the Conference, at its first sitting affirms that the stipulations relative to the pavigation of the Black Sea were suggested in 1856 under the influence of conjunctures entirely different from the present state of affairs. trust between the two periods of which I am witness. ' are in perpetally interdicted to the flag of war of the Powers possessing its coasts. It must be admitted, the expression in perpetuity was not happily chosen. In the order of human affairs, it is in the power of no one to proscribe or to deny the action of time."

After a few more observations similarly

"Has the reign, of which the memory is conneeted with the instruments of the Congress of Paris, itself stood the test of time? "This reflection leads me to a concluion which I do not his state to express with perfect

The England, at the time of the treaty, principles opposed to that arrangement had in case which imporatively demand the return of opinions opposed to that arrangement had in fact been pronounced by some political per-aonages. I am not myself of the way of thinking of those who then opposed it. I admit, however that the objection of the pleni-potentiary of Rossia to the words " in perpetuity " seem to me to have some force.

"Opinion opposed to that arrangement had allusion to Mr. Gladstone and his opinions in rive, $590 buyers, $5921 sellers, bargain chop 1856. Sugar shares are heavy, at $8 per drawn up, at the end of an important war. They have given Turkey the opportunity, during fourtees yeurs, of insuring ber independence and scurity by measures of civil, mili-tary, and taval administration. But now Russia desires to be freed from these ongagements; and the Queen's Government is ready to concur in the change "on o ndition that fit-ting equivalents can be found." The Austrian and Italian Ministers are also prepared to conour in such an alteration of the Treaty, on the same conditions. Apparently, the Pressian Minister does not deem it necessary to say anything. His role is singularly like that of a loaded gun dumb but portentous, at the side of Baron Brannow. And so ends the second

The Turksh Minister objects to the use of those hat words, "the non-riversin Powers;" he wishes to substitute for them "the friendly Powers:" for reasons at once significant and obvious. The riversin Powers are two, Turkey and Russia. Therefore, as the sentence stands it implies or pre-supposes attack on the part of Russia. M. Musurus says on this point:—

"As I had the honour of declaring in the last. sitting, the Sublime Porte, which would doubt-

The Prussian representative speaks for maintaining the original language of the article—"non-riversin Powers," So does the Russian Minister, in a long address abounding in expresions, of hope that concord may be muintained the whole speech, being like an: invitation from the oat to the mouse to observe how noft her foot is. That surely is language plain enough. And then comes a passage, at which, we imagine, party privoipally interested in the question, the Lord Granvills must have winced visibly. THE EXECUTION OF GENERALS LE COMTE AND CLEMENT THOMAS. The following is an account of the execution: of the two French: Generals :- "Arrested at the moment when his troops reversed their arms, General Le Comte was at first conducted to the Chaleau Rouge, where they commenced by making him sign a declaration, by shich he bound himself not to draw his sword against Paris. Immediately afterwards they demanded from him that he should send to those of his troops who still remained at their posts the order to return to their barrucks; the General signed once more. He was not to get off at that price. Soon afterwards, conducted to the Rue des Roners, he had to undergo an exumination. Before whom did he appear? Was judgment passed? What was the nature of this judgment? Nobody knows. All that is known is that, taken out of No. 6, Rue dee Rosiers, he was led into a garden, placed with DIRST-CLASS Granite GODOWNS, at his back to a wall, and shot. As far as we can Wanchi. Apply to learn from the account, even of some National Guards who said they were appetators of this drams, General Le Comte showed himself firm and resolute till the last moment. Arrived at the place of execution, he is said to have been deeply affected by the sight of the corpse of General Thomas, who had been killed before him. Obliged in a certain manner to pass over his prostrate and mutilated body, he uncovered his head; then, replacing and fastoning his kepi, he turned towards the firing plateon, his head erect, and his arms crossed on his breast. A few seconds afterwards be fell beside his colleague. This latter was arrested after General Le Comte, whilst walking along the exterior boulevard dressed on bourgeois. After suffering some ill-treatment at the hands of the crowd, he was also taken to the Chateau Rouge. and afterwards to Rue des Roniers, where be was brought before an improvised tribunal. It is said that during his examination he anaddressed to him, and that on being violently Mr. H. C. CALDWELL.
